The Excel Leadership Group Invites Area Leaders to Join its New Free Online Community

Peoria, IL, January 21, 2009—The Excel Leadership Group, LLC (Excel) announces the launch of its new Web-based “community” devoted to open and honest discussions on topics related to leadership challenges and solutions. In making the announcement, Mike Crompton, a certified executive coach and the founder of Excel, issued an invitation to area executives, managers and other business leaders to join the Excel Leaders Community and participate in its free, online forums.

“I am excited about the potential of our Excel Leaders Community,” Crompton said. “It gives area leaders a virtual meeting place where they can connect with other members to interact and learn from each other how they can become more effective leaders, which is critically important today given our economic challenges.”

In the forums, leaders will discuss the challenges they’re facing, and share insights, tips, advice and best practices with each other. Forum topics will range from motivating your team and reducing employee turnover to creating the right culture and increasing customer satisfaction. Crompton will also be an active voice in the community forums. He said, “I know we will all learn valuable information from the lively discussions that will take place in the forums.”

Any site visitor to ExcelLeadership.net can read forum posts. To post their own comments, visitors need to register to become a member of the Excel Leaders Community. There is no cost or obligation to become a member. “We’re making it a quick and painless process to join our community,” Crompton said.

“Simply register a username and password, and start posting.”

An Excel brainstorming session led to the idea for developing the community. “We challenged ourselves to think of other ways we could help executives, beyond our executive coaching for individuals and groups, and leadership workshop services,” Crompton said. “And the Web community discussion forums quickly became a reality.”
